On Sunday, March 19, India summoned a senior United Kingdom diplomat over the removal of the Indian flag atop the high commission building in London by pro-Khalistan protesters, accusing the UK of "indifference" to the security of Indian diplomatic premises.

Videos of pro-Khalistan protesters outside the Indian high commission in the UK had spread across social media. Amidst chants of Khalistan zindabad, a protestor climbed onto the flagpole above the door and brought down the Indian flag without any hindrance from any security personnel. With the UK high commissioner Alexander W. Ellis travelling, his deputy Christina Scott was summoned to the Indian Ministry of External Affairs late on Sunday night. Ahead of his colleague being summoned, Ellis posted on his official Twitter account that the "disgraceful acts" at India House in London were "totally unacceptable". Later, UK minister of state for the foreign commonwealth and development affairs, Tariq Ahmad tweeted that he was "appalled" at the attack and described it as a "completely unacceptable action against the integrity of the Mission and its staff". "The UK Government will always take the security of the Indian High Commission seriously," he wrote. Unusually, the MEA had announced that a UK diplomat would be summoned in advance. "The senior most UK diplomat in New Delhi is being summoned," said the MEA spokesperson Arindam Bagchi on Sunday night.

ANGER OVER KHALISTAN SUPPORTERS PULLING DOWN THE TRICOLOUR AT THE MISSION IN LONDON

India has meanwhile registered its strong protest with the British government over the safety of its diplomatic mission and questioned the lack of sufficient security at the premises.

The pulling down of tricolour flying atop the Indian High Commission in London by pro-Khalistan protesters has infuriated people back home, with calls of strictest action against the culprits. A group of Khalistan supporters waved separatist flags and chanted pro-Khalistani slogans on Sunday as they grabbed India's national flag flying atop the mission in London, leading to an arrest related to the violent disorder. Shiv Sena (UBT) leader and Raja Sabha member Priyanka Chaturvedi condemned the incident and said strictest action against the culprits needs to be taken by UK government. "This is absolutely shameful, unacceptable and needs to be condemned strongly. Strictest action against the culprits being disrespectful to our tricolour & trespassing needs to be taken by UK Police & its Government," she tweeted. Congress MP Rajeev Shukla tweeted: "Highly condemnable incident. Culprits must be arrested by British police."

Officials from the mission said the "attempted but failed" attack had been foiled and that the tricolour was now flying "grander", reported PTI. Scotland Yard said it was called to reports of disorder on Sunday afternoon and that a man has been arrested as its enquiries continue. "There was no report of any injury, however windows were broken at the High Commission building," the Metropolitan Police statement said. "Officers attended the location. The majority of those present had dispersed prior to the arrival of police. An investigation was launched, and one male was arrested nearby a short time later on suspicion of violent disorder. Enquiries continue," the statement said. The external affairs ministry in New Delhi, meanwhile, summoned the senior-most British diplomat to lodge a protest after several videos on social media showed a Sikh man pulling down the flag outside the Indian mission in London. British deputy high commissioner Christina Scott was "reminded in this regard of the basic obligations of the UK Government under the Vienna Convention", said a statement from the external affairs ministry.
